Logiscool trainers have hit business and media success in Hungary

We recently got happy news: two of Logiscool's former trainers, Áron Bőhm and Zsombor Bege have appeared in Shark Tank (Cá pák), a popular investment TV-show in Hungary.

We're always happy to see the success of our current or former trainers, and we're especially overjoyed if they reach it through the same mentality and skills that they've also passed on to our students at Logiscool.

Áron and Zsombor's enterprise, Quantum Student Association, is a perfect example of this spirit: a fully digital student work association, which makes student work simpler and more cost-effective by digitalizing its administration, helping both students looking for work and the companies that employ them. Their solution is an excellent example of how information technologies and digital literacy can make our lives easier in the business world!

Their success is hallmarked by the fact that the show's investors ended up literally competing for the investment opportunity. Áron and Zsombor could pick their favorite out of several offers. Congratulations to them!

Their achievement is also positive feedback for us. The skills that served Áron and Zsombor in their venture so well are the same skills they have passed on to our students previously: creativity, logic, problem-solving, as well as an entrepreneurial spirit. And who knows? Maybe their present success will one day inspire a Logiscool student to start up their own company, in a similarly innovative spirit.
